Fraternity suspended over video

Investigation could result in revocation of student group status for Delta Kappa Epsilon at U of A • Frat house residents refusing interviews over alleged hazing

The University of Alberta's dean of students announced the registration suspension of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity on Thursday.

The suspension comes a week after a video surfaced that allegedly showed frat pledges being forced to eat vomit. "Effective immediately, the registration of the Delta Kappa Epsilon registation of the Deta Rappa Epsilon fraternity, as a student group at the university, is suspended," Frank Robinson said. "The suspension is in effect until further notice."

A pile of frozen vomit greets visitors at the front door of the frat house near the university campus, perhaps an indication of how often residents have used the door over the past week.

Delta Kappa Epsilon members have remained tight-lipped about the incident since the video was leaked.

The fraternity can appeal the suspension, which will end once an investigation is completed by Campus Protection Services.

Robinson said anyone with information on the incident is encouraged to come forward.

"Any student that may be affected by these activities is encouraged to access the full suite of confidential student services available at the university," he said.

"We are treating this as a very complex situation involving a lot of our students and we take it very seriously.

What to do when things get Wooly

• Wooly Bully's is the second bar in Old Strathcona to be hit with conditions • City is working with bar owners to reduce incidents

The city is encouraging owners of an Old Strathcona bar to start cleaning up their clientele after Wooly Bully's Pub had conditions placed on its business licence Thursday.

The conditions were recommended to the city in a joint submission by the bar owner and the Public Safety Compliance Team (PSCT) in the hopes of stopping ongoing vio-lence and disturbances in and around the bar.

'In the past 18 months, there were numerous concerns and some incidents that were occurring inside and outside of Wooly Bully's that were brought to our attention, mainly through the EPS Whyte Avenue beat members," said Nicole Chapdelaine, co-or-dinator of PSCT.

Chapdelaine said PSCT met with the owners of Wooly Bully's and the decision was mutually made to place conditions on the bar.

"We decided to put the conditions on to assist them with giving their staff and themselves some really specific direction in terms of expectations of what to do to ensure the facility is safe and that no one else gets injured," she Chapdelaine called it a proactive approach. Shirley Lowe, executive director of the Old Strathcona Business Association, said despite conditions being placed on two bars in the area, incidents in Old Strathcona have gone way down over the past two years. "We do have statistics that show that incidents are down about 33 per cent," she said. "There's a substantial difference."

Lowe credits the work they've done with PSCT and the Best Bar None Program, which rewards es-tablishments for cleaning up their act.

"We have good operators and not-so-good operators," she said.

"But you can't tar everybody with the one or two that need a lesson in man-

Conditions

The three conditions require that Wooly Bully's:

- Maintain a daily incident log that tracks any problems and how the staff dealt with them.
- Prepare and maintain a manual outlining the policies and procedures used in the business.
- Keep a record of who is entering the club by scanning patrons' identifications and maintaining a list of banned patrons

Tories plan to rename riding after Klein

Ralph Klein may be gone from politics, but his old colleagues plan to put him on the electoral map in Calgary.

Government members have voted to amend a report into new electoral boundaries to include changing the name of Calgary-North Hill to Calgary-Klein. The government must still pass a bill to make the change official, but has an overwhelming majority in the legislature in which to do it.

"This doesn't have anything to do with partisanship. If people want to make it that, they do so on their own terms," Tory backbencher Kyle Fawcett said Thursday.

Fawcett represents the North Hill riding and put "Too often we don't say thank you soon enough, and I think it's a great opportunity to do so," he

He said he told Klein about the plan and that Klein was "humbled by the gesture.'

Klein grew up in Tuxedo Park, in the centre of the North Hill riding.

Futuristic learning tool yields results

U of A robot lets students learn by doing

ASPEN ZETTEL

It's a lucky kid indeed who gets to use a robot made of lego to do their math homework, but for Chelsea Hagan it's just one step further in learning and retaining information.

The only student in her class with cerebral palsy, Hagan, 14, uses the robot to learn math and measurement. Her head is her most controlled member of her body, which she uses to tap sensors alongside her head to communicate and manipulate a complex computer attached to her chair.

Using this computer, Chelsea is able to control the robot with infrared sensors built into her communication device.

The robot is part of a larger program designed by Dr. Al Cook and Dr. Kim Adams to enable those with cerebral palsy to learn by doing. Kinesthetic learning is a major fundamental advantage for retaining information.

"If you have no use of your hands it's a difficult process to learn," said Dr. Al Cook, professor in the department of speech pathology and audiology in the faculty of medicine at the University of Alberta. "You can imagine if you had only to watch and never to do, you would learn a significantly smaller amount of things."

For Chelsea it means being able to physically manipulate objects to better grasp the concepts of space and length.

Chelsea's mother, Debbie Hagan, loves the robot for another good reason. "It lets her have toys and be able to play with them," said Hagan. "She's always a little entrepreneur. She sells her earring trees. Her favourite show is Dragons' Den."

CP incidence

- There are 65,015 cases of cerebral palsy in Canada.
- Dr. Al Cook has been working with robots and children since the 1980s.
- There is an average of 2.12–2.45 per 1,000 live births of cerebral palsy.

Just like the real thing?

On of the things Dr. Al Cook's team has been questioning is whether a virtual robot can provide the same stimulus as a real robot. Some children with mobility issues in Portugal have experimented with virtual-reality environments in order to learn three dimensionally. Cook's team has been experimenting with gaming consoles, but they're still gathering information.

New Perks Scheduled for Transit Commuters

Retail Services in LRT Stations

ETS is re-visiting the licensing of existing retail space in Central, Bay/Enterprise Square and Corona LRT stations, which could mean more retail kiosk services that enhance your commuting experience. These 13 downtown kiosk locations stand to provide services to not only ETS customers, but also to people traveling through the pedway system.

In the near future, you could see new businesses offering convenience related food, beverages as well as other goods or services. While one of the locations is on street level, 100A Street and Jasper Avenue, the remaining 12 are on the mezzanine of the three downtown LRT stations.

Do spread the word that anyone interested in this business opportunity can find the Request for Proposal at www.takeETS.com.

Customer Survey on Features and Amenities

With the continued expansion of the LRT and bus systems as well as an ongoing program to upgrade our existing facilities, it's more important than ever that ETS has a solid understanding of the physical features and amenities customers feel should be part of their transit experience.

We're currently in the process of surveying customers, like you, to get a better understanding of how we can meet your expectation. We're focusing on four categories: services (like kiosks, vending machines); amenities (like washrooms, shelters, heaters); design elements (like lighting, sight lines, art); and maintenance (like cleanliness). We'll be asking customers to set priorities based on funding and the level of importance to them.

These responses will directly impact how we enhance your travel experience in both new and existing facilities.

Onlooker faints as young Somali girls are shot'Those who watched could not bear the pain'

Two accused spies died amid a fusillade of bullets from a firing squad organized by a hardline Islamist militia.

the event could not bear the painful experience. Two very young girls were shot as they watched and no one could help," said Dahir Casowe, a local elder.

Al-Shabab is linked to Al Qaida and has carried out whippings, amputations and executions to enforce its own strict interpretation of Islam.

Shortly before the executions, Sheik Mohamed Ibrahim sentenced the girls to death for spying for government soldiers fighting al-Shabab.

The only qualifications Ibrahim needed to be appointed a judge by al-Shabab were that he be male and know the Our'an.

Kirchner's death leaves questions

Thousands of Argentines filed past the coffin of former leader Nestor Kirchner on Thursday, honouring a man whose unexpected death leaves his widow, President Cristina Fernandez, alone to face a re-election fight and push their leftist political program.

Presidents from Chile, Uruguay, Bolivia Ecuador stood with Fernandez, who wore sunglasses and sometimes rested her hands on the casket holding her husband's body lying in state at

Jewish leader fighting sex offender status

Surkis expresses remorse in child pornography case
 Crown wants his sentence to send a clear message

A former Quebec director of B'nai Brith said Thursday he's deeply sorry for downloading child pornography and recognizes the impact his actions have had on his family.

Bill Surkis expressed remorse during his sentencing hearing in Montreal.

The former Jewish community leader, who pleaded guilty in May to one count each of accessing and possessing child pornography, will be sentenced Dec. 9.

But the Crown wants to send a clear message to the public that downloading and possessing child pornography only serves to fund an industry that profits from exploiting young children.

To that end, they want to have Surkis, 71, declared a registered sex offender, which is a sticking point in the sentencing.

The Crown and defence have agreed that Surkis should receive the minimum sentence allowed by law — a 45-day jail term, to be served on weekends. There would be 240 hours of community service and three years probation.

The Crown's request that Surkis be registered as a sex offender and have his DNA taken has been dismissed by Surkis and his lawyer as unnecessary and punitive.

"That would put me in a position where I would not be able to serve my community," Surkis said. "I downloaded videos, yes, but I am not a sex offender."

More students paying more

▶ Rise in enrolment ranged from 0.7% in N.L. to 4.5% in B.C. ▶ Grads more likely to land knowledge-based jobs

Rising enrolment rates at Canadian universities were hailed Thursday as a future boon to the Canadian economy, but student advocates warned skyrocketing tuition is putting post-secondary education out of reach for many students.

Overall university enrolment increased 3.7 per cent over last year and 57 per cent from 1995, the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada reported. There were 898,000 full-time university students registered this fall.

Petition

- More than 39,000 people have signed the federation's petition calling on the federal government to create a national post-secondary education act and restore funding for post-secondary education to 1992 levels.
- The petition is online at www.educationisaright.ca.

That's good news for the economy, because university graduates represent about a quarter of the working population but are about 40 per cent of the tax base, said association president Paul Davidson son.

"To be able to afford the quality of life, the standard of living, the quality of public services that we have in Canada, requires these kind of high-quality jobs that university graduates are getting," Davidson said.

University graduates increase Canada's productivity and innovation, said Davidson. They also make more money.

Ont. city official blunders

The mayor of Elliot Lake says he'll investigate an apparent social media blunder by the northern Ontario city's chief administrative officer.

Dan Gagnon is accused of making inappropriate remarks about mayoral challenger Bob Whitehead on his personal Facebook page. The offending message has been taken off Facebook, but it went viral after it was copied into an email sent to many Elliot Lake residents.

The Facebook comment attributed to Gagnon expresses relief that incumbent Mayor Rick Hamilton won Monday's election.

It says challenger Whitehead had "zero municipal experience" and was on record as saying the city doesn't need a CAO.

Gagnon says he is unable to comment at this time.

• French strikes fail to draw large numbers of people as they did previously • Demonstrations by train and oil workers tapering off

Strikes caused hassles for air travellers in France on Thursday, but nationwide street protests over a plan to raise the retirement age to 62 failed to draw the massive crowds of weeks' past — a sign of slackening resolve among the bill's opponents.

Parliament has already approved raising the retirement age from 60 to 62, but union leaders insist they will not give up their fight until conservative President Nicolas Sarkozy actually signs the bill. Still, fewer protesters followed them into the streets this time, and strikes by train and oil workers have been tapering off in recent days.

In Paris, demonstrators waved union flags and set off flares, while in southern Marseille, they beat drums and blew whistles. Past demonstrations have drawn more than a million protesters into the streets: this time, the Interior Ministry put the figure at 560,000 nationwide. The hard-line CGT union contested that number, putting turnout at 2 million.

"It's true you could say the anti-reform movement is slowing down, but you need to ask why," Serba Germain, a 67-year-old retired police officer marching in Marseille, told Associated Press Television

"People are disappointed, they are frustrated" because the government hasn't listened.

Unions and opposition parties urged Sarkozy not to sign the law, which polls show is unpopular. He is expected to do so by mid-November, after it is cleared by France's constitutional watchdog.

But Sarkozy has refused to back down, even amid two weeks of strikes that cancelled trains. shut down oil refineries and left drivers struggling to find gasoline.

A small number of trains were cancelled Thursday, but the problem was bigger for airlines. A third of flights at Paris' Charles de Gaulle airport and half of those at the city's smaller Orly were cancelled. Flights were expected to run as normal Friday.

Bin Laden recording authentic: Ministry

A newly released audio tape of al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden threatening France appears to be authentic, the French Foreign Ministry said Thursday.

day.

The voice on the audio tape threatens to kill French citizens to avenge their country's support for the war in Afghanistan and in revenge for a new French law that will ban burqa-like Muslim veils. The audiotape was obtained by the Al-Jazeera television station.

The Foreign Ministry says the tape's "authenticity can be considered established based on initial verifications."

The message "only confirms that reality of the terror threat," Foreign Ministry spokesman Bernard Valero said.

A series of terror warnings has put France and other European countries on high alert in recent weeks, prompting the U.S. State Department to advise American citizens live to take more precautions.

Speculation on the source of a potential terror threat in France has focused on a group called al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb.

That group, an offshoot of bin Laden's network, has claimed responsibility for the abductions of five French citizens in Niger and is believed to have taken them to neighbouring Mali.

The French hostages, as well as a Togolese and a Madagascar national, were kidnapped on Sept. 16 while they slept in their villas in the uranium mining town of Arlit.

Volcano's guardian killed by eruption

For 33 years, Maridjan spoke to Mount Merapi, believing he could appease its unpredictable spirits by throwing offerings of rice, clothes and chickens into the volcano's gaping crater.

Many villagers took his word — not that of government officials or seismologists — as the last on when it would erupt. And the 83-year-old did appear to predict the volcano's latest eruption — which killed 33 people this week — but did not heed the warning.

As thousands of villagers streamed down the mountain's slopes, Maridjan refused to budge. More than a dozen people stayed, and perished, with him.

His rigid body was found yesterday, prostrate on the ground in the typical Islamic prayer position and caked in white soot.

On Thursday, high-profile politicians, soap opera stars, singers and hundreds of followers flocked to his funeral on the slopes of the mountain.

Maridjan was a constant

Key holder

source of frustration for those tasked with overseeing evacuations. Every time he refused to head down the mountain, he set a bad example for others, putting their lives at risk, they said.

Among the 14 other people found dead in and around his home, halfway up the mountain, was an Indonesian Red Cross volunteer who was trying to persuade him to leave.

Tsunami death toll mounts

Rescue teams losing hope of finding missing Wall of water, created by a 7.8-magnitude quake, crashed into west Indonesian islands Monday

Rescuers searching islands ravaged by a tsunami off western Indonesia raised the death toll to 370 Thursday as more corpses were wrapped in body bags or buried by neighbours. Officials said hundreds of missing people may have been swept out to sea.

Elsewhere in Indonesia, the volcano that killed 33 people earlier this week began erupting again, though there were no reports of new injuries or damage. Mourners held a mass burial Thursday during a lull in Mount Merapi's rumblings.

The twin catastrophes struck within 24 hours in different corners of the seismically charged region,

"First, we saw sea water recede far away, then when it returned, it was like a big wall running toward our village. Suddenly trees, houses and all things in the village were sucked into the sea and nothing was left."

Islanders dug graves and slung up tarps to sleep under in one of the hardesthit areas, where a three-metre wave had swept houses off their foundations and deposited the shattered remains in the jungle. Many residents who fled to the hills were refusing to return home for fear the sea might lash out again. Search and rescue teams kept away for days by stormy seas and bad weather — found roads and beaches with swollen corpses lying on them, according to Harmensyah, head of the West Sumatra provincial disaster management centre.

black body bags on Pagai Utara, one of the four main islands in the Mentawai chain located between Sumatra and the Indian Ocean.

In a rare bright spot, an 18-month-old baby was found alive in a clump of trees on Pagai Selatan island on Wednesday. Relief co-ordinator Hermansyah said a 10-year-old boy found the toddler and that both his parents are dead.

On Pagai Seatandug island, the wave deposited giant chunks of coral and rocks the size of people into the places where homes once stood in Pro Rogat village, one of the hardest-hit areas with 65 dead.

Did tsunami warning system do its job?

Indonesian officials are left questioning whether the tsunami warning system functioned properly in the face of Monday's devastating wave.

The chief of Indonesia's

The chief of Indonesia's Meteorology and Geophysic Agency, Fauzi, said the special buoys that detect sudden changes in water level broke down last month because of inexperienced operators and poor maintenance.

However, Joern Lauterjung, head of the German-Indonesia Tsunami Early Warning Project for the Potsdam-based GeoForschungs Zentrum, said a warning did go out five minutes after the quake — but the tsunami hit so fast no one was warned in time.

"The early warning system worked very well — it can be verified," he said.

He said only one sensor of 300 had not been working, and it had no effect on the system's operation.

Health care spending going up - and down

• Belt-tightening by provinces behind shrinking rate, expert says • Lowest growth rate 'in last 13 years'

Total health-care spending in Canada this year is predicted to reach almost $192 billion, up almost five per cent over 2009, says a report by the Canadian Institute for Health Information.

The 155-page report, released Thursday, says that figure translates into about $5,600 for each man, woman and child in the country.

"Over the last 10 years, we've seen the growth in health-care spending over and above population growth and inflation," said Chris Kuchciak, manager of health expenditures for

"There were significant investments in health care. But now fiscal positions have changed." CHRIS KUCHCIAK ent this year is that the growth rate in 2009 and 2010 seems to be decelerating.

Actual per capita healthcare spending is expected to rise by just 1.4 per cent this year, Kuchciak said.

The growth rate of 1.4 per cent is actually the lowest growth rate in the last 13 years."

Kuchciak said a number of factors are likely behind the shrinking rate, including belt-tightening by provinces.

A similar squeeze on spending occurred during the mid-1990s, a period of restraint when the growth in health spending was either flat or negative, he said, noting that the trend was reversed in the late '90s, when governments made a concerted effort to boost allocations to health.

report shows health-care spending is expected to account for 11.7 per cent of Canada's gross domestic product in 2010, down from 11.9 per cent in

Khadr apologizes for killing soldier

Notes on the proposed transfer to Canadian custody are to be released

Convicted Canadian war criminal Omar Khadr stood in a Guantanamo Bay courtroom Thursday and apologized directly to the widow of the American soldier he killed eight years ago.

Taking the stand to deliver an unsworn statement, Khadr also said his greatest wish was to get out of prison and one day become a doctor.

"I'm really, really sorry for the pain I caused you and your family," Khadr told Tabitha Speer, who hours earlier branded him a murderer.

"I wish I could do something that would take this pain away from you."

Speer initially shook her head as he spoke, and then wept. Khadr told his Pentagon-

IF YOU DON'T KNOW, PLEASE DON'T VO

Crucial mid-term elections will take place next Tuesday in the United States. The Republicans could regain political control in Washington and block Obama's projects.

rvan Caplan, economics professor at George Mason University, has some advice for the millions of voters who plan to cast ballots on election day: If you don't understand basic economics, why not just stay home?

In his book, The Myth Of The Rational Voter, Caplan says it's wrong to think that politicians don't listen to the people. On the contrary, politicians do listen and that's the problem! Voters are riddled with biases, according to Caplan. Especially when it comes to the economy.

Several polls carried out in the U.S. have revealed that half of voters don't know the name of their senator or representative. A good portion of the population of immigration and the population thinks that foreign aid represents 24 per cent of the federal budget. (The correct answer: One per cent.)

"Many people have backward ideas about economics, having never studied the subject. And their opinions are generally the opposite of what an economics course would teach," Caplan once told me when I interviewed him for a business magazine. For example, people who have not studied economics usually think protectionism is a good thing.

"Instead of saying, 'I don't know, I never studied that,' they state with conviction: 'Foreigners are stealing our jobs! We have to do something, regardless of what economists say!"

The average voter exhibits numerous biases in economic matters, according to Caplan's research. Among other things, people tend to underestimate the advantages of market mechanisms, or the benefits of immigration and free trade. They also like to blame scapegoats for economic problems - speculators, oil companies, Wal-Mart, the Chinese .

The end result: In order to cater to voters, politicians enact laws that persecute those scapegoats, or erect protectionist barriers (taxes and tariffs) to limit free trade. Policies that, according to Caplan, impoverish the economy as a whole. The professor, who does not shy away from controversy, is consistent with his recommendations: Encouraging people to vote is a bad idea, he says. "Those who abstain from voting are, on average, less educated and less informed. If all of those people voted, the average voter would be even more ignorant of economic mat-ters." Politicians would adjust their electoral platforms to cater to those voters, proposing even worse policies. "If you think politicians currently aim for the lowest common denominator among voters, you ain't seen nothing yet. That denominator can get even lower!"

Voting is a civic duty, they say. But for some, could the opposite be true?

FEAST OR FAMINE

Metro Edmonton chatted with Feast Or Famine's Matt Kerby, Paddy Sperling, Kyle Shabada and Kevin Klemp. Feast Or Famine is playing a CD release show Nov. 11.

Being a local band, was calling your latest project Edmonton & Co. a way of showing your support for the local community? What exactly were your intentions with the name?

Yes, Edmonton & Co. was definitely homage to the local music and art scene. Over the years of playing, we have made many friends and supporters and feel that it's a scene with a lot of talent and heart. A scene that maybe people take for granted sometimes. We are happy to be from Edmonton and involved in building a positive and inclusive music community. Our intentions were pure.

Can you tell me what the song on the new album Cowboy Trail is about?

Cowboy Trail is about a time when I (Kevin) spent a lot of time working for an oil field parts delivery company. I had a lot of chances to see the oil and gas industry and how it operates. I found it inter-the Cowboy Trail was once named for.

How long have Feast Or Famine been together?

We've had the current lineup since 2007. Couldn't be happier. Great bunch of musicians and friends

What do you think of the local music scene? Who are some of your favourite local bands?

We are all really excited about the growing local scene here and about trying to further the sense of unity and camaraderie. It's fantastic. © DUSTIN BLUMHAGEN

Re: What do you do when joke's on you? (Oct 28)

TORONTO. The article by Mr. Mazerolle contains some significantly offensive remarks. In particular, he likens feelings, when he failed to succeed as a standup comic, to "something akin to a kid who drops his ice cream combined with those Palestinian women you see mourning on television."

This remark is offensive on many levels, but in particular it is demeaning and dismissive of women suffering the loss of loved ones during a war. The referral to the "Palestinian women" in this context implies that they, and their grief, are somehow lesser, and mocks their reactions to their losses. I doubt Mr. Mazerolle would have made a similar reference to mourning Canadian women. His use of the grief of these women in this context serves to dehumanize them and is certainly not funny.

The use of the reference to the Palestinian women in conjunction with a dropped ice cream cone is a further degradation to the plight of these women, which should be considered separately from their context in the political arena in the Middle East. MALERIE ROSE

WHAT'S THE BEST HALLOWEEN COSTUME YOU'VE WORN?

Nadia Kovac

I never went trick-or-treating. I liked to stay at home with my parents and see all the kids come to our house. Besides, that's where all the candy was. Why go out and beg when there's tons of candy at home?

Danny Bansavatar

Ten years ago I had a homemade Dracula costume. It was an old suit with a vest and a gold chain. I had my hair slicked back with mousse and painted my face white. I went to a costume party and won third prize.

◆ James Franco takes on the real-life survival story of Aron Ralston in 127 Hours ◆ Actor underwent big weight loss to mimic what happened to Ralston during his five days of having his arm trapped under a boulder ◆ Video diary helped Franco prepare for role

Learning how to SUTVIVE

Playing a hiker with his arm pinned under a boulder for five days brought its own set of challenges for James Franco, who stars as Aron Ralston in Danny Boyle's true-life 127 Hours. The first thing he had to worry about, though, was his waistline.

"He told me I should go on a diet," Franco says of his first meeting with the director. "First of all, Aron was in great shape, but also he lost 40 pounds while he was there, from water deprivation mostly."

Of course, recreated a rapid weight loss during the film's production wasn't feasible, so Franco shed as much weight as he could before filming, then relied on some helpful tools to bulk back up when needed.

"We actually even built this prosthetic that we ended up unfortunately calling 'the plumper," he says. "It was just this mouthpiece that would plump my cheeks out for the early parts of the film, and then as he started deteriorating we could use smaller and smaller versions until we didn't use anv."

One useful tool for capturing Ralston's ordeal was the extensive video diary he kept kept.

"When we watched the real videos, one of the more powerful things about them is how simple it was and how direct and connected it was," Franco remembers.

"Some of the video messages are verbatim what he actually said," Franco says.

However, as an actor, he wasn't interested in just regurgitating Ralston's words.

"Our whole kind of approach — not just for the video messages but in general — was that we would honour Aron's story and we would do everything that he did, but also we wanted to kind of have our own approach to the story," he explains

"And so with the video messages, they were scripted, but I felt like Danny gave me the freedom to be just a little loose with the words. But every once in a while there'd be a line in there and I'd say to myself, 'I just won't say that because it's kind of stupid.' And then Danny would come to me and say, 'Well, actually, for whatever reason, Aron is insistent that you say those two words."

127 Hours not typical acting role for Franco

James Franco is the first to admit 127 Hours isn't your typical film, since it wasn't his typical acting job, either.

"There were a lot of things that were unusual," he says. "I mean, you don't usually spend most movies with an armed pinned behind a boulder. But then you also don't spend most movies alone or without other actors. So all of that took adjusting."

Franco has been making a lot of adjustments lately, choosing career moves that have surprised onlookers—including his recent stint on General Hospital and his return to school. But he claims he's not in a "why not?" phase of his career.

A Millenium let down

The Girl Who Kicked The Hornets Nest

Genre: Drama Director: Daniel Alfredson Stars: Noomi Rapace, Michael Nyqvist, Lena Endre

The cinematic adaptation of Stieg Larsson's Millennium Trilogy kicked off with a bang thanks to The Girl With The Dragon Tattoo, which was excellent. Sadlv. it ends on a whimper with this disappointing

While the first film offered delightfully trashy sex-fueled intrigue, the sequels have gone for an irritating mix of ill-conceived action movie theatrics and endless exposition. This 2.5 hour conclusion is primarily dedicated to characters explaining the plot of the previous two movies and somehow the story arc of the series still doesn't quite make sense and that's a difficult feat.

Lead actors Noomi Rapace and Michael Nyqvist are still compelling screen presences portraying intriguing characters, but even they are drowned out by all the exposition. The actors seem bored by the material this time and understandably so; audiences will likely feel the same way.

Good acting not enough

Conviction Genre: Drama Director: Tony Goldwyn Stars: Hilary Śwank, Sam Rockwell

You cannot deny that Conviction is a com-pelling tale. Based on the true story of Betty Anne Waters, a Massachusetts woman who believed so strongly her incarcerated brother was innocent of murder, she became a lawyer with the sole purpose of freeing the sibling.

That's pretty impressive. Beyond their performances though, Conviction rarely rises above the level of an impressive Law & Order episode. STEVE GOW

Funny man Ferrell gets animated

◆ Former SNL star takes on role of an inept evildoer ◆ Actor enjoyed freedom he had with character

Will Ferrell is such a humble guy that when he's asked what it's like to lead a big animated comedy like Megamind, the affable actor quickly diverts the attention.

"I don't really consider myself front and centre of this fine cast," said Ferrell before noticing a giant

Always a Joker

• We hope. "I have a lot of tight leather pants in a vault," said Will Ferrell when asked what traits he shares with supervillain Megamind. "I don't wear them. I just keep them there and there is a part of my body — that I can't go into detail on — that is blue."

banner over his shoulder clearly focusing on the titular character. "So I guess I am front and centre."

Indeed he is. Ferrell is the voice of Megamind, a blue-skinned supervillain that suddenly defeats his nemesis and finds himself in the unlikely role of public defender.

It may be his second animated feature (after Curious George), but the movie does mark a first for the funnyman.

"It's the first time (my kids) have commented on something I've been in," laughed Ferrell admitting his children didn't necessarily affect his choice in the role.

"This was just kind of a decision based pretty much on wanting to try and do another animated movie and getting the chance to work with (director) Tom (McGrath) so my children were not consulted — nor are they ever consulted about anything. It's a very strict household."

Kidding aside, its obvious Ferrell had fun conjuring up the voice of an inept big-headed evildoer that hilariously mispronounces words like "school" — the result of much improvisation in the recording studio dio.

"There is a great amount of freedom in terms of getting to come up with stuff on the spot," said Ferrell, who has considerable respect for the art. "What's lost on the project is how hard it is to articulate any emotional gearshift just with your voice. Playing the comedy is one thing but I think there's a real skill for any of these actors that can effectively do that consistently."

Oh baby! Carey and Cannon confirm

Mariah Carey is going to have to add lullabies to her repertoire.

The superstar singer confirmed on NBC's Today show Thursday that she and husband Nick Cannon are expecting their first child. Carey says the baby is due in the spring.

Carey had declined to discuss her pregnancy, the subject of rampant speculation for months, until now.

"Yes, we are pregnant, it's true," she said in an interview with Access Hollywood's Billy Bush that was shown on Today.

"It's been a long journey, but it's been tough because I've been trying to ... hold on to a shred of privacy, and that was not easy."

Carey, 40, and Cannon, 30, have been the subject of a baby watch since they got married after a whirlwind romance two years ago.

They laughed off the rumours when they occurred soon after their wedding.

"We thought it was fun, because they kept saying, 'Oh she's pregnant.' Yeah, whatever. So we took the test and it was positive," she said. But Carey had a miscarriage soon afterward. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

new side of Sarah

Whatever you may think of Sarah Palin, the fact remains Alaska is magnificent with her as its presenter. Sarah Palin's Alaska, premiering on TLC on Nov. 14, adds TV host to Palin's crowded resume, which already includes former gov-ernor former GOP vice-presidential candidate, bestselling author and conservative superstar.

Palin also is a wife, a mother of five and a grandmother, of course, and her new series integrates her home life with Alaska's great outdoors.

Judging from the first of eight episodes, Sarah Palin's Alaska keeps politics out of the picture. Sure, the show is effective in selling the Palin brand. But along the way, Palin throws herself into selling the grandeur of Alaska.

The much-anticipated documentary series, shot last summer, is based at Palin's lakeside home in Wasilla. There, cupcakes chores (or hear about it from Palin). Then Palin sets off, with family members in tow, on a jaunt such as salmon fishing on Big River Lake, where, almost within reach at the shoreline, a family of bears keeps them amused.

"Girls, when you cast, don't aim toward the bear." Palin cautions daughter Piper and niece McKinley in their boat.

"Why?" is the automatic comeback. Any parent will instantly relate.

Later in the program, Palin demonstrates mettle (and alarm) as she goes rock-climbing with her husband, Todd, at Denali National Park - and gets stuck midway.

The guide calls down instructions and encourage-ment, but Palin is stalled.

"I just don't like heights!" she declares. "I was so cocky – I'm being punished for it. I don't know if I can do this!"

It's a remarkable admission from this famously can-do personality, and, as viewers are informed, some 45 minutes pass before she figures out how to continue her ascent. Then she does it.

"That's so much worse than I ever thought it would be!" she says after reaching the summit.

The series is produced by Mark Burnett, whose many credits include Survivor and The Apprentice. In a recent interview with The Associated Press, he marveled at how gung-ho all the Palins were in taking part.

►Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin is shown in a reality series Sarah Palin's Alaska

"It would start out with, 'We're gonna have Sarah and Todd do something,'" Burnett said. "And as she's getting ready, she would say, 'Piper, you want to come? Willow, you want to come?' Take the politics away, and this is a family, and they hang out a lot together.'

Befitting the travelogue quality of the show, it boasts eye-popping scenes across the state's vastness.

With all that acreage available, the Palins make it clear they're irked that writer Joe McGinniss is living right next door.

McGinniss, the bestselling author of books including The Selling of the President and Fatal Vision, is never mentioned by name, and his face is blurred as the camera catches a glimpse of him over the fence.

But Todd Palin explains, "Our summer fun has been kind of taken away from us because of a new neighbour next door who's writing a hit piece on my wife."

(In an interview with the AP in September as he packed to leave after three of months research, McGinniss wouldn't reveal what his book about Palin will say. But he said he chose her as a subject because, "I wanted a reason to come back to Alaska," where he lived in the 1970s while researching an earlier book, Going to Extremes. He said he rented the house after its owner sought him out, not to spy on the Palin family.) THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Arquette defends his confessions

David Arquette says he hopes talking openly about his separation from Courteney Cox can help others in similar situations.

"A lot of people are going through stuff like that, and it just helps to kind of hear a celebrity that's experiencing the same kind of things," Arquette said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Arquette, 39, and Cox, 46, confirmed their separation earlier this month after 11 years of marriage. They have one child.

Arquette, who starred in the Scream movies and Never Been Kissed, has received some criticism for calling in to Howard Stern's radio show since going public about the split from Cox and revealing intimate details of their relationship, such as why they separated and what their sex life was like. Arquette most recently called in to Stern Wednesday morning.

He says his latest on-air chat with Stern was a scheduled appointment and he didn't want to break it. He also just wants to be honest with someone he trusts.

"I love Howard Stern," he said. "I think he's the most honest journalist out there. ... He's been so supportive of me and defended me. ... I didn't want to let him down."

Arquette said he realizes he's ruffled some feathers with his honesty: "I know I probably offend some people. I have been talking a little too much so I'm trying not to talk as much."

Arquette said one way he's been able to divert from the separation from Cox is focusing on his professional career.

Got a big cat? Call Ryan Kwanten

True Blood star Ryan Kwanten says he's the "go to guy" when a production calls for working with panthers, though he has a healthy fear of them.

Real panthers were used in the HBO series, and Kwanten said Thursday he was supposed to work with a panther in his new Australian Western Red Hill, until he learned the feline had turned on its owner in a deadly attack.

Instead, Kwanten acted while writer/director Patrick Hughes pretended to be the feline off camera Kwanten joked that it was his "finest bit of acting to keep a straight face and try to stay in it while my director was licking his paws and carrying on." Smith's doctor acquitted, psychiatrist guilty

Anna Nicole Smith's psychiatrist Khristine Eroshevich and boyfriend Howard K. Stern of conspiracy counts, but acquitted the doctor who prescribed drugs for her of all charges.

The only conviction against Stern was for giving false names and acting by fraud to obtain prescriptions. Eroshevich was also convicted of unlawfully prescribing Vicodin by fraud.

The jury acquitted defendant Dr. Sandeep Kapoor of all charges. The jury found the prosecution did not present enough evidence to convict Kapoor of six charges that he provided excessive prescription drugs to Smith.

The defendants were charged with conspiracy, excessive prescribing of addict, and fraudulently obtaining drugs by using false names.

The jury deliberated about 58 hours after being asked to decide if the three defendants were trying to relieve Smith's emotional and physical pain or were feeding her addiction to prescription drugs.

The defendants were not charged in Smith's 2007 accidental overdose death in Florida.

The story of Smith's fi-nal years stretched from Los Angeles to the Bahamas with stops along the way in South Carolina and Florida, where her overdose death at the age of 39 was ruled accidental.

The two doctors also were close to Smith during her final years, and their lawyers portrayed them as angels of mercy trying to help her before and after she gave birth to her daughter by cesarean then quickly lost her 20-yearold son, Daniel, to a drug overdose.

Pasta problems? We got you covered

How to cook, dress and eat every pasta in every shape

Chances are you know linguine goes with clam sauce and fettuccine loves Alfredo. But which pasta pairs with pesto? Or a hefty car-

"Pasta has evolved over many hundreds of years in Italy and it's taken a long time for them to work out what tastes best," says British chef Jacob Kenedy, co-author with graphic designer Caz Hildebrand of The Geometry of Pasta. Together they are advocates of a simple truth: Pasta and sauce, correctly paired, yield a sublime experience.

They had plenty of material to work with. More than 300 shapes of pasta exist, each with a specific texture and strategy for delivering flavours.

In general, lighter sauces pair well with thin pastas. Oily, punchy sauces go with thicker pastas. Sauce will cling to a rough-textured pasta, such as a ridged penne, Kenedy says, while a smoother one like spaghetti will create a more delicate dish. Short tubes and cup shapes are good for "sauces with bits in them," Kenedy says, such as those with diced meat or vegeta-

"More intricate shapes are quite fun to play with," he says. "It's like when you're a little kid and you put things in your mouth."

Nikita Filatov and Rick Nash scored in the shootout to overshadow Taylor Hall's first NHL goal, leading the Columbus Blue Jackets to a 3-2 victory over the Edmonton Oilers on Thursday

The game was played before 9,128 fans, the smallest crowd to watch the Blue Jackets at home.

In the shootout, Edmonton's Sam Gagner went first and appeared to have scored after he got Mason down on the ice with a fake. But Mason reached back with his stick to flick the puck away at the last instant.

Nash then buried a hard shot with very little deception, just past Devan Dubnvk's blocker.
